PANAMÁ CIUDAD

Panama is a country in Central America bordered by water on both sides - the Northern coastline borders the Caribbean Sea and the Southern coastline with the Pacific Ocean. The country's strategic position has been decisive in many of the aspects of this nation - the isthmus that constitutes Panama, connects two giant continents and forms a bridge for the diversity of flora and fauna of South and North America. In addition, the geographical fact that Panama is located only 9 degrees North of the equatorial latitude ensures a pleasant, warm and consistent climate during all months of the year.

In sum, one small tropical country with two long coasts makes for a big playground. In a world where the wilderness and native cultures are inexorably disappearing, Panama – against all odds – continues with its essence intact. Panama is an explosion of wildlife, cultures, history and ethnicities.

DOLPHIN & WHALE WATCHING

The waters off Panama is the only place in the world blessed enough to host the Humpback Whale migrations from both the Southern and Northern hemispheres every season. During the Southern hemisphere Humpback Whale season, there is a 95% chance of spending time with the whales. The Pacific Ocean off Panama is home to more than 30 species of cetaceans (dolphins & whales).

In the Pearl Islands, (where 2 seasons of the Survivor TV-series was filmed), as well as at Taboga and Taboguilla, the water is crystal clear turquoise and there are many islands, some deserted, around which you can observe these extraordinary creatures - whales are a familiar scene during the migration season in the warm waters of the Pacific Ocean, especially between Panama City and Contadora Island, where hundreds of whales gather to mate in the Bay of Panama. The majestic scenes of mating whales are, without a doubt, one of the star attractions of Panama.

EMBERA INDIGENOUS COMMUNITY

The Embera Indians are one of the many ethnic indigenous tribes in Panama. Visitors are welcome to discover their culture in one of their communities, Embera Purú, Parará Purú or Embera Drua (choice depends on the climate), each located on the banks of one of the most important rivers in the Canal Basin. After a scenic bus ride to the banks of the San Juan or Charges River, we are met by representatives of the Embera Indians who take us up the river in piraguas (wood canoes). We then arrive at a community of Embera Indians, originating from the mountainous region of the Darien province.

We experience the history and culture of the indigenous culture, through narrative, traditional dance and craftsmanship like baskets woven from the natural fibers of the chungu, maquenque and naguala palm trees, as well as figures carved in cocobolo wood and tagua (better known as vegetable ivory). We will enjoy a traditional lunch of fried fish and yucca or plantains served in a plantain leaf cone. This is the opportunity to try an ancestral custom in the form of a tattoo with jagua, an extract from vegetable seeds, which the Embera use to adorn their bodies with geometrical patterns or animal sketches for ceremonies and special celebrations. There is also time for a refreshing bath in the waterfall.

Degree of Difficulty: I-II

Included: Bus and river transport in an engine-powered piragua, Englishspeaking tour guide, donation to the community and park, traditional lunch, fruits, tattoo (voluntary) and beverages.

Pregnant women and clients under the influence of alcohol or any other intoxicants are not allowed to partake in this activity. Weather conditions may cause the visit to the waterfall to be cancelled. In that case, the visit will be limited to the community.
